Waltonwood Senior Living provides outstanding service and an unmatched quality of care to thousands of seniors across Michigan, North Carolina, and Virginia. Throughout the Covid-19 pandemic, Waltonwood has taken measures above and beyond the CDC guidelines to ensure the safety and health of residents and associates. “Our worry-free lifestyle is something all seniors deserve. More seniors are now choosing to call Waltonwood ‘home’ because of our unwavering commitment to safety and wellness,” said Sara Bailey, senior regional director of sales.

Even with protocols in place, life at Waltonwood continues to be stimulating and enriching. “While safety continues to be our number one priority,” Sara said, “we have not forgotten how to have fun!” Waltonwood’s Life Enrichment team has found creative ways to offer programs that incorporate social distancing. Residents can enjoy a wide variety of activities that include fitness, art, wellness and unique cultural experiences while feeling safe from infection.

Good food matters too. The Waltonwood experience includes a commitment to culinary excellence. From everyday dining to special celebrations, their culinary experts and in-house pastry chefs deliver fresh, nutritious and delicious meals that are truly a form of art.

Education is a Waltonwood priority. They have partnered with the Institute of Gerontology to provide a vast array of trainings for about a decade. “The IOG has been instrumental in helping us provide new programming, educational opportunities and resources to our residents, families, and Waltonwood associates, especially during the pandemic,” Sara said. Continuing education programs reach nurses, social workers and other health providers throughout the community at large. “We look forward to continuing our partnership with the IOG to enrich the lives of all seniors and those who serve them.”
